

```
import java.util.Scanner;

public class MatrixTranspose {

    public static void main(String[] args) {

        Scanner scanner = new Scanner(System.in);

        // Get dimensions of the matrix
        System.out.print("Enter number of rows: ");
        int rows = scanner.nextInt();
        System.out.print("Enter number of columns: ");
        int cols = scanner.nextInt();

        // Create original and transpose matrices
        int[][] originalMatrix = new int[rows][cols];
        int[][] transposeMatrix = new int[cols][rows];

        // Get user input for original matrix
        System.out.println("\nEnter elements of the matrix:");
        for (int i = 0; i < rows; i++) {
            for (int j = 0; j < cols; j++) {
                System.out.print "[" + i + ", " + j + "] = ";
                originalMatrix[i][j] = scanner.nextInt();
            }
        }

        // Perform matrix transpose
        for (int i = 0; i < rows; i++) {
            for (int j = 0; j < cols; j++) {
                transposeMatrix[j][i] = originalMatrix[i][j];
            }
        }

        // Print the transpose matrix
        System.out.println("\nTranspose of the matrix:");
```

```
for (int i = 0; i < cols; i++) {
    for (int j = 0; j < rows; j++) {
        System.out.print(transposeMatrix[i][j] + "\t");
    }
    System.out.println();
}
}
```